Your smile is beautiful. It's a Ferrari of smiles," the admirer told the woman.

The compliment not only made the woman beam, it was also a compliment for her dentist, Dr. Lois Kovalchick. "My greatest professional rewards come from making healthy and pleasing smiles," Dr. Kovalchick says. "The goal is to enhance someone's smile in a personal way, helping them to look natural, believable, and authentic."

A smile is most beautiful when three ideals come together: Teeth and gums must be healthy, they must function well, and they must be aesthetically pleasing. While the "perfect" look still graces magazine covers, many people are now asking for a fresher smile — one that appears as if it were created in the natural world. A good dentist takes many things into consideration in order to accomplish this goal: size, shape, style, color, and a sense of balance that's in tune with an individual's face.

There's a direct connection between your overall health and your oral health. Your oral health may display the first visible signs of an underlying condition, such as diabetes. It's also known that there's a link between oral health and cardiac disease. Because of that, it's important to think of regular dental visits as an essential investment in your complete health.

Of all her professional accomplishments, Dr. Kovalchick is most honored to have mastered the educational continuum at the world-renowned Dawson Center for Advanced Dental Study, and to have been the recipient of the Gold Medal Award for her dentistry from the American Academy of Cosmetic Dentistry — the dental equivalent to an Olympic gold medal. For nearly 25 years, she has sought to improve dental possibilities among her patients and her community. Together with her wonderful staff, she has created a practice worthy of Hour Detroit's Top Dentist distinction.
